SORORITY OF WOMEN OF METTLE

The very compelling discussion on being women, writing and the books, was moderated by Rajwardhan Singh

A writer afternoon in mid-December found quite a crowd at the Oxford Book Store on Connaught Place, as bibliophiles congregated at a corner to listen to three women authors, diverse in their positions, but drawn together by an urge to tell their story. Curated by luxury consultant MADHAVI ADVANI, the event was supported by the Oxford Book Store as part of its centenary celebrations, Habibs, Navdishi Times, Retropop lifestyle magazine, In Vogue Life, The Explore Journal and the Astha Dixit Dance Academy. We list here the three books that created a buzz that afternoon, including Advani's self-help guide, Mantras for Success. Also in discussion were actor and dancer ASTHA DIXIT'S memoir, Door to Heaven and academic, JYOTI SINGH'S short-story collection, The Legends of the Muddled Land

HER STORY

Astha Dixit Joshi was born in New Delhi and raised in Los Angeles. She studied computer engineering at UCLA, but gave up a stable, if secure career, to pursue her passion for Kathak. After setting up her own dance academy in Los Angeles, she returned to India to act in commercial cinema. As she says in the preface of her memoir, Door to Heaven, "Somehow my life has taken me to the rarest and sometimes the farthest shores." The author's quest for self-realisation takes the reader through an immensely readable narrative.

TALES OF WONDER

Jyoti Singh's collection of short stories were inspired by tales she had heard from her late husband and may have been a creative outpouring of the sense of loss she experienced in his absence. The Muddled Land is an allegorical reference to a part of the present day state of Bihar, where both the author and her husband hail from and Singh uses her creative licence to unsparingly dissect the persona of some of her protagonists, reducing them to goofy characters who should delight readers.
